COURSE OVERVIEW

The first course on teaching methods for humanities that has been developed based on new principles in education worldwide is the "Seven Seasons of Teaching" In this course, 12 chapters are designed to train humanities instructors. Through these chapters, an instructor can practically become familiar with a type of teaching that allows them to both teach the necessary skills in humanities related to their work and select the required knowledge precisely, all while focusing on the principles of effective teaching. The term "Seven Seasons of Teaching" is chosen with reference to Attar's "Seven Seasons of LOVE" signifying a spiritual journey that a teacher should undertake in improving their teaching methods. It suggests that simply knowing these stages won't lead to success; it requires contemplation, practice, and acquiring the necessary skills.
